Some Intra-pelvic Conditions; their Diagnosis and Treatment

PERCY H. WOODALL, M. D., D. O., BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

(Paper read before Annual Meeting of Kentucky Osteopathic Association. May 30. 1908.)

I wish to direct your attention to intra-pelvic conditions in contradistinction to extra-pelvic lesions. Our wonderful results in detecting and correcting spinal and pelvic skeletal and associated irregularities have a tendency to cause us to overlook visceral conditions that have arisen usually secondarily and sometimes independently of these. That these skeletal and associated lesions are of paramount importance, no one can deny; yet their consideration must not cause us to ignore secondary or independent visceral conditions or derangements.

We must include in our category of lesions some extra-corporeal conditions which as certainly, though perhaps not so seriously, affect the health of the individual as a displaced vertebra or a subluxated innominate. It may be contended by some that these conditions affect the organism deleteriously by first producing structural changes, though I do not believe such to be the case. Among these extra-corporeal lesions, as we will term them, we find, dietetic errors, bad hygienic conditions, climatic influences, overwork, excesses of various kinds, general environmental conditions, hereditary influences, and what pertains more particularly to our subject, improper dress. Would that some feminine Moses might arise and lead her sisters out of the bondage of custom and convention. Can you conceive of perfect pelvic circulation with the prevailing style of dress ? Should the 20 inch or smaller waists and the three inch heels not affect the structure of the body permanently and perceptibly, as they often do not seem to do, such conditions necessarily affect the individual's health and however normal the structure, the function of the organism will sooner or later suffer. With a circulation deranged or resistance lowered it needs but the presence of the gonococcus, to which according to good authorities are due 12 per cent of female ills, or the slightest abrasion at parturition to open the avenues of infection, regardless of spinal and pelvic skeletal, muscular or ligamentous derangement. Should there be present any of the skeletal or associated lesions they are an added predisposition, but their recognition and location does not give exact information as to the resultant conditions, nor does their correction always remove their effects or exhaust our resources for cure.

Of all the methods of physical diagnosis the osteopath most frequently employs palpation. His excellence in the practice of this diagnostic art fits him pre-eminently for the detection of tissue irregularities and abnormalities wherever they occur. This proficiency should be exercised in every department of practice that will increase our usefulness to our patients and enable us to more certainly and more frequently cure them. I have never in any case been able to secure more information than I could use, nor can anyone arrive at a correct diagnosis of intra-pelvic conditions without a careful intra-pelvic examination, which is merely a matter of palpation. Do not understand that I would have every patient who complains of pelvic symptoms submit to a local examination, for I am well aware that in a great many cases such symptoms are directly due to structural spinal and pelvic irregularities and are promptly cured by a correction of these. However, it is better by far to make innumerable examinations than to overlook some internal condition upon which the continuance of the patient's illness depends. By delaying such an examination a slight lumbar lesion may be treated for a backache due to a displacement, or for a dysmenorrhoea due to a flexion, or for a leucorrhoea due to a gonorrhoeal infection; or a slipped innominate replaced to relieve a menorrhagia due to a small fibroid or a malignant growth, or a temporary amenorrhoea due to a tubal pregnancy. In such cases distressing and fatal results may occur while we are waiting for our extra-pelvic treatment to cure. The gonorrhoeal infection successively becomes a vaginitis, an endometritis, a salpingitis, and a pus tube, permanently crippled and embedded in a mass of inflammatory material, from which a local peritonitis results. The malignant disease while we are temporizing extends beyond the uterus proper and makes its complete eradication an impossibility and the hope of a curative operation is lost. Rupture occurs in the tubal pregnancy while we are delaying an examination and we are confronted with all the grave dangers of hemorrhage, shock and an emergency operation.

Time will not permit us to consider the many intra-pelvic conditions and we shall consider the most frequent and important ones. These may be arbitrarily divided into non-inflammatory and inflammatory classes, though we cannot be sure that inflammation does not play some part in the first class. Of the non-inflammatory conditions the most important are the neoplasms, fibroids, cysts, malignant tumors, tubal pregnancy, hematoma, etc. In the inflammatory class are endometritis, salpingitis, pyo-salpinx, hydro-salpinx, pelvic peritonitis and cellulitis, etc.

Of all these fibroids are most common. It is estimated by one author that 20 per cent of women have them before reaching the age of 35, and by another that 40 per cent of all women who reach the age of 50 have them. The most common symptoms are hemorrhage with its consequences and pressure and its results. These symptoms are neither distinctive nor diagnostic. Bimanual palpation is the reliance in diagnosis. The three varieties of fibroids, the submucous, interstitial and the subserous, each gives its own palpatory signs. The submucous and interstitial forms increase the size of the uterus, uniformaly as a rule, and are usually hard and nodular. In those cases when there is a symmetrical enlargement of the uterus these may be mistaken for pregnancy and when fibroids complicate a pregnancy the diagnosis is very difficult. The cessation of menstruation, regular enlargement of the uterus, softening of the cervix and lower uterine segment, nausea, changes in the breasts, and the fetal heart sounds will ordinarily make a diagnosis possible without great difficulty. The passage of a hand or digital exploration of the uterus is sometimes necessary before a diagnosis can be positively made.

A pedunculated subserous fibroid may be mistaken for an ovarian cyst; but the distinctive palpation of a pedicle per rectum, absence of fluctuation, the finding of the normal ovary, the connection of the tumor to the uterus as may be determined by pulling on the cervix with a tenaculum while the tumor is held between the hands externally, and the nodular feel of the fibroid will usually clear up the diagnosis. An inflammatory exudate by the side of the uterus has been mistaken for a fibroid, but such masses usually have a history of inflammation, or fever; it hugs the sides of the pelvis and fixes the uterus but does not increase its size. In a recent case a hematoma gave rise to a very puzzling problem. A diagnosis might have been positively made by passing a sound, but was made by an operation. An intraligamentous fibroid grows upward between the layers of the broad ligament, is low in the pelvis and is sometimes felt projecting into the vagina. Its location is very similar to that of a pelvic exudate or a hematoma, but its circumscribed outline, and its hard nodular feel will usually distinguish from any other condition occurring here. A sloughing fibroid may be mistaken for a cancer.

Treatment is not required in a great number of cases of fibroids. In all cases where there are lesions that could possibly affect pelvic circulation they should be removed as fibroids grow or decrease in size with the flow and ebb of the pelvic blood stream. They should be treated directly and with no fear of causing them to grow unless they be bruised or otherwise injured from the severity of the treatment. For pressure symptoms raise them out of the pelvis or have the patient assume the knee-chest and Trendelenburg position alternately. Inhibit the lumbar and sacral nerves. For hemorrhage enjoin rest, and have the patient take copious hot douches, temperature 110 to 120 F. An ice bag to the abdomen and one to the sacrum is often of service.

Another serious trouble and one that may be overlooked unless its occurrence is borne in mind, is cancer of the uterus. This usually occurs in the cervix, occasionally in the body of the organ. Its most prominent manifestation is hemorrhage, and every case that presents a symptom of profuse or irregular bleeding near the climacteric demands the most searching examination to locate the cause of the trouble. Do not at this time be lulled into false security that the bleeding is due to some lesion outside the pelvis. True, such a lesion of recent occurrence may have at first precipitated the bleeding, or so far as we know may be the direct cause of the cancer, but we do know that a removal of such lesion is not all that must be done. If no signs of cancer be found, keep the patient under observation for some time and make regular examinations until the cause of the hemorrhage is determined. When the trouble is located in the cervix there will usually be some evidence of the cancerous nodules or the cancerous ulceration. Often these things are engrafted upon a lacerated cervix with considerable erosion of the mucous membrane, and it may require the microscopic examination of the tissue by an expert to disclose the true nature of the condition.

For cancer I believe there is only one cure, total extirpation. This is possible only in the early stages of the trouble, and this fact makes the early diagnosis of the disease of great importance.

In discussing diseases of the fallopian tubes we will consider only the terminal stages of salpingitis, i. e. pyo-salpinx and hydro-salpinx. These cause varying degrees of pelvic disturbance, often trivial, sometimes serious, and can be diagnosed only by the educated touch. They present to palpation an elongated tumor, usually nodular or irregular in outline and situated at the side of the uterus, though they sometimes prolapse and may be found behind this organ. They vary in size from that barely discernible to a tumor as large as an orange. In consistence they are usually softer than a fibroid and sometimes fluctuation can be detected. In diagnosing these the tubes should be followed out from the cornua of the uterus, and the pear shaped enlargement will be recognized. Occasionally the tubes will be so densely matted together and adherent to the uterus as to seemingly form a continuous tumor with it. A pedunculated subserous fibroid may give very similar evidences on palpation, but its outlines are usually more distinct, its pedicle is palpable especially per rectum, it does not limit the motion of the uterus as the adherent tube does, and a history of puerperal or gonorrhœal infection is usually absent. An ovarian or a parovarian cyst may be mistaken for a sacto-salpinx. The absence of the history of infection and pelvic inflammation will aid in making the diagnosis in these cases, as a localized pelvic cellulitis or peritonitis is practically always associated with tubal disease.

It is in tubal inflammations on the right side that all the diagnostic ability of the osteopath will be needed and his skill most sorely tried. It is here that appendical inflammations enter to complicate the matter, as some degree of appendicitis is found in 15 per cent of inflammations of the right tube.

In appendicitis the pain is most often in the neighborhood of McBurney's point, whereas in tubal or ovarian troubles its location is deeper in the pelvis and the tenderness is most pronounced when pressure is made over Poupart's ligament. This evidence is robbed of its absolute reliability by the fact that the tip of the appendix is often found below the brim of the pelvis and sometimes even on the left side. A local examination will elicit tenderness in either case, but if the pelvic tenderness is bilateral the case is most probably one of tubal, peritoneal or pelvic connective tissue origin. A pelvic inflammation is usually accompanied by a vaginal discharge which may have begun several days before the onset of the more severe symptoms. There is often the history of previous attacks in appendicitis and in it the rigidity of the abdominal muscles of the right side is more marked.

In some of the cases great responsibility is put upon the osteopath. The average surgeon, in cases of pelvic or abdominal inflammation counsels operation. This the patient does not desire and turns to us. We realize that operation is often more dangerous than the disease, yet, on the other hand we also know that there are cases in which operative procedures are imperatively demanded. The question is how to best steer our patients life bark between the Scylla of the knife and the Charybdis of pus formation and rupture of abscess. An intimate knowledge of pathology is now necessary as well as of the possibilities and limitations of Nature's almost boundless recuperative resources. If the inflammation is active, and gives evidence of pus formation by chill, followed by high fever and a high leucocyte count and is not promptly controlled by osteopathic treatment, rest, diet and ice-bags locally, and upon these I place great reliance in the early stages, an operation is indicated. Otherwise counsel palliative measures.

Surgical measures are by no means necessary in a great many of these cases of pelvic inflammation. Repeatedly has a pus tube been evacuated through the uterus or its contents absorbed from the correction of the circulatory conditions. Correct all lesions outside the pelvis, then devote attention to those on the inside. Relax the adhesions which are binding down and crippling the tube. Make manipulations so as to force contents toward the uterus. Be more than careful. Watch for any signs of inflammation reaction, such as pain and fever, and defer further internal treatment until these have disappeared. Hot douches, hot sitz baths, and hot applications to the lower abdomen are beneficial.

Among the diseases of the ovaries we will mention inflammation, abscess, and tumors, the latter usually cysts. Ovaritis usually occurs in association with salpingitis, peritonitis or cellulitis, and like an abscess is recognized by the extreme tenderness of the organ, limitation of its movements by adhesions, and the general symptoms of inflammation. To these manifestations, abscess adds those of pus formation though often it is exceedingly difficult or impossible to make a differential diagonsis. Ovarian cysts are pedunculated, separate from the uterus, having less connection with the movements of the uterus than the pedunculated fibroid. They often present the sign of fluctuation. In the treatment of ovarian conditions it is only the active abscess that requires surgical procedures. Occasionally the cyst may cause pressure symptoms that demand its removal. The simple inflammation is treated according to the usual rules of thorough relaxation of the spine at affected centers, inhibition, rest and ice applied locally.

Tubal pregnancy is one of the intra-pelvic conditions upon the early recognition of which depends the patient's life. The missed menstrual period (sometimes not seen) the rather unusual pain in one side of the pelvis, the sudden severe pain at the time of rupture, the enlarged tube and bogginess about the uterus, the symptoms of severe hemorrhage, and the passage of some blood containing decidual shreds from the uterus, will in most cases make the diagnoises clear.

In such cases, when clearly recognized, there seems to me to be but one thing to do, open the abdomen, ligate the bleeding vessels and remove the fetus.

A hematocele or a hematoma sometimes is seen. The knowledge of their occurrence, their location in Douglas' pouch or in the connective tissue around the uterus, and their consistence, putty-like or doughy, will usually prevent an error in diagnosis. They are usually preceded by a history of ectopic gestation or slight violence. In a case recently seen the hematoma was close beside the fundus of the uterus and of the consistence of a fibroid. A diagnosis was made on the operating table.

As a matter of fact no effort has been made to make an extended review of the many intra-pelvic conditions one may see. Only the most important and frequent ones have been mentioned. What I wish to emphasize is that when there are symptoms pointing to a pelvic trouble, the pelvic organs should have as intelligent, as careful, and as thorough examination as is given to the spine.

Physical Diagnosis

D. S. B. Pennock, D. O. M. D., Philadelphia, Pa.

The average osteopath is a specialist on diagnosis of the anatomical structure of the body and an expert in the detection of its most minute deviations from the normal. In just one aspect of physical diagnosis my experience has taught me that as a class we are deficient, and that is in the detection of the physical signs of disease of the organs contained in the thoracic cavity and in the appreciation of their value. In this paper on organic diseases of the heart I, therefore, intend to dwell especially on the technique of conducting a thorough physical examination of this organ. Concerning the absolute necessity of accurate diagnosis Mc Connell, in his "Practice of Osteopathy", has this to say: "Then by knowing what the affection is, 75 per cent of the hard work is accomplished — The real work in osteopathy is in making the diagnosis; the treatment is comparatively easy. 'Learn to diagnose intelligently,' should be the motto of every osteopath". In the treatment of organic heart disease it is just as essential to diagnose the changes in the structure of the heart as it is to ascertain the osseous lesions present. Without knowing the former it is impossible to accurately adjust your treatment to the needs of each individual case. It is not enough to simply remove the lesion. In some of these cases the patient is not able to stand such corrective work at once. I have seen several cases injured by such treatment. Symptoms in this class of cases are misleading, as in functional heart troubles they frequently cause more distress and anxiety to the patient than the more grave organic lesion. Therefore it is only by means of accurately detecting the physical signs of disease by the use of our special senses that we can hope to apply the appropriate treatment to each individual case.

Etiology

For convenience of description I am classifying these general causes under these headings: i. e., those conditions acting especially in childhood; those acting in early adult life; and those acting in middle and advanced life.

So called osteopathic or bony lesions I believe are seldom the direct causative factor of organic heart lesions. In fact in many organic troubles I have been unable to find an osseous derangement that I could attribute as a specific, direct cause of heart lesion. Osseous derangements of the upper dorsal or cervical regions are found in most cases of functional heart troubles: these derangements are a direct irritant to the nerve supply of the heart. The accelerator and vaso-motor nerves orginate in cells of the anterior horn of the gray matter of the spinal cord from the second to the fifth dorsal segments inclusive. From their origin they leave the cord through the anterior nerve roots, via. the white rami communicantes, reach the dorsal sympathetics, up which they pass to terminate by arborization around cells in the three cervical ganglia. These cells in turn send axones out as the peripheral cardiac sympathetic nerves. The cell body is more susceptible to the effect of mal-adjustment than is its axone. All metabolism connected with the origination of a nerve impulse occurs in the cell. This conduction is not attended with any metabolic change in the fiber so far as we know. Structural derangements, then, affecting function of these nerves will be located in the immediate area in which these cells are situated. Such derangements act in one of two ways, either by mechanical pressure on the cell or its processes, or by obstruction of its blood and lymph supply thereby disturbing its nutrition. The first sign is increased function, which increase of excitability is maintained, until in time, through exhaustion, paralysis may result. The primary effect therefore of derangement upon the sympathetic nerves to the heart results in rapid heart action, palpitation, vaso-dilation, etc. The ultimate effect is to inhibit the normal function of these nerves by exhaustion. This allows the vagus to act unopposed decreasing the strength of contraction of the heart muscle and, lengthening the cardiac cycle.

Derangements affecting the vagus will be found in the upper cervical region. The primary and secondary effects of these derangements are just the opposite of these affecting the sympathetics.

Generally the direct result of the so called osteopathic lesion on the heart is functional in character, either affecting the frequency or strength of its beats, one way or the other, or interfering with the normal rhythmical contractions of the heart muscles, leading to irregularity of action or the heart dropping a beat at intervals. These two conditions are especially the result of lesion to the vaso-motor to the heart. Physiology tells us that the first effect of interference of the nutrition of heart muscle is manifested by loss of the normal rhythmical contractions. Ultimately this interference of nutrition may lead to organic changes as is instanced by angina pectoris and fatty degeneration.

In Childhood

As a rule organic lesions are secondary to some systemic condition. During childhood the most common etiological factor is toxic endocarditis. This is a complication or sequel to the acute infectious diseases peculiar especially to this period of life. Inflammatory rheumatism ranks first. Some authorities on diseases of children go so far as to say that in every case of this disease, occurring in a person under twenty, endocarditis is a complicating factor. While this statement is hardly true in those cases treated osteopathically, at least it shows that the per cent is high. Scarlet fever, whooping cough, typhoid fever, pheumonia, measels, and chorea are also to be placed in this class.

Endocarditis attacks the endothelium in the immediate area of the mitral and aortic valves. It rarely, if ever primarily attacks the right side of the heart. Its special affinity is the mitral valve. As a result of inflammation the endothelium becomes denuded in spots on or around the valves. The connective tissue basement membrane is thickened and roughened. This leads to growth of connective tissue excresences commonly termed "cardiac vegetations." These occasionally become detached by the blood current and, being swept out into the arterial system, may become clogged in an artery at the base of the brain and produce thrombosis, embolism, or hemorrhage, resulting in paralysis.

Secondarily the basement membrane changes thicken the valve orifice and cause a stenosis so that the valve cannot completely close, producing regurgitation. In later childhood excessive physical exertion, straining the heart muscle, is another factor. In girls, jumping rope carried to excess; in boys, too violent indulgence in athletics, are common causes.

In Adult Life

In early adult life violent exercise is a very common cause. I have seen several cases of aortic regurgitation caused by a single muscular strain of great violence. Exercise increases the arterial blood pressure. This brings the strain on the aortic valve and consequently this is the valve most commonly affected in this class of cases. During adult life endocarditis is occasionally a cause. This is a far less frequent complication than in children.

In later adult life another important etiological factor is to be classed with the preceeding; namely, arteriosclerosis. "That a man is as old as his arteries" is a very true saying. The age of his arteries depends on the presence or absence of arteriosclerosis; it is normally found in a limited degree in old age. Certain diseases and habits are important factors in the development of arteriosclerosis.

I know of no osseous derangements that directly cause this. Sedentary life, over work (whether mental or physical,) over eating and drinking of alcoholic beverages, are important etiological causes. All of the above mentioned causes tend to increase the blood pressure, which in time induces a gradual thickening of the connective tissue in the coats of the artery. The effect of this is to increase the strain on the aortic valve. Sclerosis of the coronary arteries, diseases of circulation in these vessels and consequently malnutrition of the heart muscle is the result. Therefore lesions of the aortic valve and left ventricle are common results of this condition.

The Signs of Heart Lesions

To properly understand the different signs found on examination of the heart one should have a thorough knowledge of its most important physiological facts. The cardiac cycle and everything that occurs at each period of the cycle should be thoroughly understood.

The beginning of the cardiac contraction is in the circular muscular fibers of the great veins leading into the auricles. By this means a valve is formed at the orifice of these veins, which prevents regurgitation of blood from the auricles into the veins. From this point the contractile wave passes down over both auricles equally. Certain of the muscle fibres pass from one auricle to the other, forming a figure of eight spiral around each auricle. This arrangement insures unison of action of the auricles. Internal to this is another set of muscle fibers running from the auricular-ventricular groove of each side of the heart up over the auricle to be attached to the same groove posteriorly on the same side that it originated from. The contraction of these two sets of muscles running along different planes tends to completely empty the auricle and obliterate its cavity. During this period of the cycle the auriculo-ventricular valves are open the blood is flowing into the ventricles. So far no sound normally is heard.

On completion of the auricular systole the ventricles commence contracting. The pressure of the blood in the ventricles immediately causes the auriculo-ventricular valves to close and the aortic and pulmonary valves to open. The closure of the mitral and tricuspid valves causes a part of the first sound. The muscular arrangement of the ventricles, though somewhat more complicated, is quite similar to that of the auricles. The thickness of muscles of the left ventricle is about three times that of the right. The left ventricle is capable of marked hypertropy while the other chambers of the heart are only slightly so. The vibrations originating in the contraction of muscular wall of the left ventricle give rise to a sound, which, with that of the closure of the mitral valve, compose the first sound of the heart.

With the completion of the ventricular systole, the blood being emptied into the aorta and pulmonary artery, the muscular walls relax. The relaxation lowers the intra-ventricular pressure and as soon as it falls below that of the blood pressure in the aortic and pulmonary arteries their respective valves snap shut. The closure of these valves causes the second sound of the heart.

Now as to sounds of the heart; in this connection for simplicity and convenience of diagnosis it is best to examine the left side first, entirely disregarding the right, though remembering that the same things are occuring on both sides at the same interval of time. As a matter of fact all forms of organic heart lesion primarily begin on the left side of the heart in practically all cases, excepting the rare congenital right sided lesions found in children. So that in examination of the heart always examine the left side first, and secondarily the right side. This greatly simplifies the diagnosis. Considering the left side then let us carefully analyze the cardiac sounds. The first sound, as we have seen, is composed of two separate and distinct elements; the valvular and muscular. The valvular sound element is of short duration, high in pitch and snapping in quality. The muscular element on the other hand is of comparatively long duration, much lower in pitch, and its quality is booming. These two factors must be considered when listening to this sound for one tells us the condition of the mitral valve and the other the muscular strength of the ventricular contractions. If the mitral valve fails to completely close and allows regurgitation of blood into the auricle the murmur thus produced will always occur with this sound. Also at this time the blood normally is flowing through the aortic valve. Should there be a strenosis or narrowing of this valve it will cause a murmur when the blood is passing over it. Thus the murmur at this time must be one of these two conditions.

The second sound element is purely valvular and resembles the valvular element of the first sound except that the snapping quality is louder, due to the fact that the blood pressure in the aorta is higher than in the ventricle and causes the valve to close with more force. Leaking or regurgitation of the aortic valve takes place while the valve normally closes. An aortic regurgitation, therefore, is always heard with the second sound.

While the ventricle is in systole the auricles commence contracting and forcing their blood into the dilating ventricle.

Should there exist a stenosis or narrowing of the mitral valve the murmer from such a condition will now be heard. In other words, a mitral stenosis is heard just after the second sound, running up to, and terminating with the first sound. With these facts in mind, the working rule is first to determine accurately with which sound murmur occurs. Then on having ascertained this fact we know that only two murmurs at the most can occur with one sound and proceed to differentiate between them. By following this method the diagnosis becomes easier. When through with the left side then take the right and make the diagnosis accordingly.

At different periods of life the rapidity of the heart beats vary within wide limits. During fœtal life the heart beats as heard through the abdominal wall of the mother resemble the ticking of a watch, and are from 140 to 150 pulsations per minute. During the first year of infant life the rate is from 130 to 140 normally. From the first to the third year the normal rate is from 90 to 130. At the seventh year 85 to 90 is the normal. At the fourteenth year it drops to 80 to 85 per minute. In adult life it reaches the standard of 72 or thereabout per minute. With old age we frequently find it dropping normally as low as 60 to the minute.

"An Unusual Obstetric Case"

M. F. HULETT, B. S., D. O., COLUMBUS, O.

An article by Dr. M. E. Clark under the above title in the July Journal is a very interesting and instructive one. There might be a question, however, whether the outcome was wholly a success. Dr. C. congratulates himself that there was no perineal laceration. Yet the child was dead, due to prolonged compression of the cord in the delivery. These questions might arise: Could the child have been saved by a more speedy delivery at the expense of the perineum? Which is considered the greater injury, laceration or a dead child?

I mentioned some months ago in these columns two cases of breach primapara in which forced delivery caused laceration, yet the babies were revived. One lived: the other died in spasms the next day, probably due (partly at least) to other causes than difficult delivery. And the repaired perineums are now in an excellent condition. What they may be at a future birth remains to be seen.

I am of the opinion that a large per cent. of even breach cases can be delivered without laceration if we sufficiently prolong the extraction. But are we justified in it when the life of the child is at stake? My judgment is that a longer compression of the cord than four or five minutes in order to protect the perineum from laceration would be unjustifiable.

Another question: Was Cesarean operation indicated in the case mentioned?

It is not my purpose to get into an argument with our authoritative friend Dr. Clark. I know too well his capabilities along this and other lines. But I am after information, for myself as well as for the profession generally.

Mental Phases of Gynecological Work

JOSEPHINE A. JEWETT, D. O., BERKELEY, CAL.

In considering the mental states of gynecological patients and their connection with the physician's work, the first questions that arise are: "Have such mental conditions any practical connection with curing the patient? Are they of much importance?" It seems to me that the doctor can answer "yes" to both queries, and although the subject is rather involved and difficult in many ways, it will repay a careful study by the practitioner who has much work among women.

To an osteopath the anatomical connection between the genital organs and the brain is naturally the first point to investigate, and this is very close. Byron Robinson, writing of the "Relation between visceral (sympathetic) and cerebro-spinal nerves," says: "The organ which has the most intimate connection with the cerebro-spinal axis and the abdominal and pelvic brain is the uterus. * * * This intimate nervous connection of the uterus with the nervous system increases with the ascending scale of animal life." We will find, then, the closest connection between the uterus and brain in the human species, it being the highest of the animals and having the largest brains. The details of this cerebro-spinal nerve supply to the genitals are hardly necessary for present purposes; it is sufficient to recall in general that, according to Quain, sensory nerves from the ovary pass through the sympathetic to the tenth dorsal segment of the spinal cord, from the uterus by the same route to the 10th, 11th, 12th dorsal and 1st lumbar; from the os uteri to the second third and fourth sacral;—that the perineal muscles are supplied with motor nerves and the skin over them with sensory nerves from the second, third and fourth sacral segments through the internal pudic nerves, a direct cerebral connection and under voluntary control in large degree;—that from the lower dorsal and first and second lumbar segments, motor fibers proceed through the sympathetic to the circular fibers of the bladder, uterus and rectum, with inhibitory fibers to the longitudinal muscles, also vaso constrictor fibers to the clitoris;—and that from the second, third and fourth sacral segments, through the sympathetic, motor fibers pass to the longitudinal muscle of the rectum, uterus and bladder with inhibitory fibres to the circular muscles, also vaso dilator fibers (nervi erigentes) to the cavernous bodies of the clitoris and the bulbs of the vestibule. This nerve supply, together with the nerve supply from the same segments of the spinal cord to the muscles of the lower abdomen, inguinal region, inner thighs and buttocks and to the skin over them, Byron Robinson says, bring into harmonious action the skin and mucosa, muscles and viscera of the pelvis and associated regions.

This is plain, but how far the actions of the mind, voluntary and involuntary, may influence diseased conditions of the genital organs, or, vice versa, be influenced by them, is another question. Regarding normal conditions Landois tells us that the vaso-dilators of the penis (nervi erigentes) "may be stimulated reflexly by irritation of the sensory nerves of the penis, the transference taking place in the erection center of the spinal cord. * * * Even the conception of sensory irritation of the penis may be attended with the same results." Conditions in the female, he states, are analogous to those in the male save that erection and action of the perineal muscles (partly voluntary) take place in a less degree. He further states: "The erection center in the spinal cord is, however, naturally subordinate to the dominating vaso-dilator center in the medulla oblongata, from which connecting fibers pass downward through the cord to the erection-center. * * * Finally the psychical activity of the brain has a distinct influence upon the genital vaso dilators. In the same way as the psychical emotions of anger or shame cause dilation of the vessels of the head by stimulation of the dilators, the direction of the attention to the sexual sphere has an effect upon the erector nerves. This influence of the brain has been explicable since the dependence of the local lumen of the vessels upon the cerebral cortex has been known. From the cerebral cortex the fibers whose irritation Eckhard observed to cause erection probably pass through the cerebral peduncles and the pons. * * * All of these muscles (deep perineal) can in part be moved voluntarily and as a result the erection becomes more marked."

Then the mere thinking of sexual matters may be sufficient to stimulate the nervi erigentes and cause an erection (especially if helped by voluntary action of the perineal muscles), equally in the female, as in the male, although the action of the whole complicated mechanism is, Landois says, "less complete" in her. We must bear in mind, however, that the direct power of the mind over the erection center will vary greatly in different individuals, being very pronounced in the erotic and in others perhaps scarcely possible to demonstrate, even after a prolonged mental stimulation. Regarding abnormal conditions Byron Robinson states that, "Vaginismus may be called up by the thought of touching the vulva." It is also acknowledged by all physicians that a severe mental shock of fright or anxiety will stop menstruation and that a worried and sleepless mother will not secrete milk sufficiently nourishing to keep her infant in good condition, while the milk of an angry mother will make the infant acutely ill. These effects must be brought about by the mind acting indirectly through the sympathetic nerves to influence secretion, etc., there being, of course, no voluntary power to alter such processes.

If once directing the attention to the sexual sphere may cause an erection, what may a habit of thought persisted in for a length of time do toward producing a more or less marked and permanent vascular congestion of the parts? The most extreme case of the sort that I ever met with was that of a girl who, after her mother's death, had acquired the habit of lying on her back on the bed and reading obscene literature, her father not knowing what she was about, and had kept it up until she went insane. Subsequent observations have convinced me that it was altogether possible for the girl to stimulate the sexual center in her brain by such reading until she produced a state of dilation and erection amounting almost or quite to a complete orgasm, and such a habit would certainly unsettle the reason in time. On the other hand, where an abnormal condition has been brought about by some other means, why not look to an established habit of thought to assist in a cure by inhibition of the erection center perhaps, instead of a stimulation? We all know that a term of hard study is apt to stop menstruation for a few months, the cerebral energy having been expended in another sphere, and the race suicidists decry the higher education for women, declaring that so much directing of the attention away from sexual matters leads to a refusal of marriage and motherhood. Gynecologists have observed that the cure of genital troubles in married women is more readily brought about when they are separated for a time from their husbands, and the change in their mental action probably has something to do with this as well as the more favorable local conditions. The woman's attention and emotions are directed in a different channel and her interest strongly aroused by her new surroundings and occupation. Stimulation is directed to a different cerebral center, and it would seem to be in some such way as this that Christian Scientists and mental healers secure their beneficial results. Certainly the Scientists set their patients to a course of study, stimulated and directed by a teacher, and urge them to think daily over the new truth and attempt to practice the teaching in their active lives. It all keeps the mind of a convert busy.

Not only does the mind influence the body but physical conditions influence the mental processes, as we all know, and a bodily irritation sends its stimuli or reflex to the corresponding center in the cerebral cortex. Even in pregnancy, a normal condition though one making an extra demand on the genital strength of the individual, there is likely to be a great mental disturbance. Regarding this condition Edgar gives many details and then says: "Great allowance should be made for the whims and irritability of the pregnant woman, as she is often not responsible for her altered temper. Many changes in her are probably due to the alterations, both quantitative and qualitative, in her blood at this time, as well as the changes taking place in her sexual organs. So she should be humored and shielded, and her idiosyncrasies should be gently overlooked." In gynecological cases also we have blood altered in quality, if not also in quantity, and speaking of the conditions arising from a diseased uterus Byron Robinson says: "The irritation is transmitted to the abdominal brain, where it is reorganized and emitted to the organs of the abdomen and chest, disturbing their rhythm, secretion, absorption, sensation and nutrition. The visceral rhythm becomes irregular, secretion and absorption become excessive, deficient, or disproportionate and the blood becomes waste laden. The patient is forced slowly or rapidly through definite, though irregular stages of disease, irritation, indigestion, malassimilation, malnutrition, anemia, neurosis and psychosis."

Thus the gynecological patient is peculiarly subject to many varieties of mental and nervous excitement and many reflex symptoms, including irritability of temper, sleeplessness at night, headache, palpitation of the heart, indigestion, etc., etc. If she will steadily refuse to think of her troubles, cultivate her appreciation of the bright side of things and firmly try to quiet herself, especially in the evening, she can control these symptoms in a greater or lesser extent, sometimes even to the point of making herself think she is already cured or has no uterine disease at all, since such troubles often only show themselves to the patient's consciousness by their reflexes. If she is able to take up some new occupation or study that is especially interesting to her without undergoing undue fatigue in finding the time for it, the change of mental activity will be beneficial by diverting the psychical stimuli from the sexual center in the brain and so assisting to lessen the lumen of the erector blood vessels.

Exhaustion of every kind, however, mental as well as physical, is to be avoided as the debilitation of the nervous system exaggerates whatever trouble a patient has and may induce a genuine hysterical state. Here mistakes are easy to make, especially where symptoms are complicated, and one that the gynecologist should avoid is in diagnosing a disturbed mental condition, excited emotions, unreasonable ideas and lack of self-control, as hysteria. Such symptoms may accompany hysteria but they do not constitute the condition. Here again Byron Robinson tells us: "Hysteria has certain stigmata, viz.: (a) anesthesia of the conjunctiva bulbi; (b) anesthesia of the mucosa of the pharynx; (c) anesthesia or hyperesthesia of skin (especially of abdomen); (d) sudden paresis or exacerbation of muscle (knee, globus, tongue, knotting of belly muscles); (e) occasional mental phenomena, and (f) disturbance of special sense, as sudden blindness or excessive hearing. Some of these six stigmata must be present to diagnose hysteria," and gives directions for ascertaining the genuineness of the symptoms, which is important to the practitioner, since hysteria is common to both sexes and is caused by other conditions than genital troubles. Furthermore the hysteric has much less self-control than the usual gynecologic patient and the treatment has to be more by suggestion on the doctor's part with less active, voluntary co-operation by the patient. Assistance is often needed in the distinctly mental phases of the non-hysteric as well, and here suggestion may be worth much in some cases, but it is my belief that the active, earnest co-operation of the patient's own will and mental powers is worth more and is more likely to do permanent good.

But in securing this co-operation, the physician meets several obstacles at the outset. Women are naturally very shy telling their mental experiences, their thoughts, feelings and dreams concerning sexual matters, to anyone. And this repugnance to any interference with the genital organs appears to be as natural and physiological as the repugnance among lower animals to any stimulation of their organs except at the period of mating for reproduction. It is nature's defense against abuse and prevents masturbation, a thing that is never seen among the animals, since the physiological function of their sensory innervation is not interfered with and defends them from abnormal stimulation. But the accidents, perversions and unhealthy surroundings to which civilized woman is subject do not permit an entirely natural life with purely normal stimuli to the genital tract. Still she has the natural repugnance to interference in a great degree, developed as a physiological function of her organism. To be sure it can be, and is, subordinate to her mental control and will power. When injured and ill she submits, however reluctantly, to treatment for relief of pain, but she generally tells as little as possible of her condition, and as for the mental phases, she either does not recognize them as part of her disease, or considers them as a phase to be religiously concealed. I do not know how many women and girls who have taken some form of gynecological treatment in the course of their lives have told me of this or that thing which they "never told the doctor, of course. It was none of his business." One young woman told me she stopped treating with an eastern osteopath because: "He began asking me about generation and such things,—how I felt,—things which I might possibly discuss with my husband but certainly not with him." And there is reason for this feeling; I cannot blame the women.

Besides the natural repugnance to discussing such matters at all, there is the fear of being misunderstood,—judged to be "nasty" or "impure" on account of the effect of some irritation not fully understood by the woman herself,—and the fear of having her confidence betrayed . Both these fears are often well grounded, for there seems to be no matter so little understood and so subject to violent prejudices as the sexual function. Many have but little charity for those whose mental condition is perverted along this channel, whatever the cause of the perversion may be, and a woman usually does best to keep her troubles strictly to herself. Her personal confidence in her doctor must usually be very great to induce her to explain herself at all fully, and physicians labor in this field with scant information, lack of data, and wide differences of opinion which seems to be always drawn from personal experience and colored by the doctor's personal character. Each physician is apt to learn most completely the mental state of those patients most like himself in character and feeling, for here will the greatest confidence be developed.

Nevertheless a great deal can be done by a sympathetic physician to assist women suffering from an abnormal stimulation or irritation of the sexual brain center by an inflamed or congested uterus. Women who are afflicted by erotic dreams or waking thoughts seldom know the reason and are often tormented by the idea that there is something very horrid or shameful in a condition which they can tell no one, "not even mother" as girls have said to me. Alas, mothers do not always understand and a sharp reprimand or stinging rebuke is not likely to be helpful to these patients. Even some married women have troubles of the kind for which they are glad to find relief, if possible. If a doctor suspects mental difficulties but can not very well ask direct questions, suggestions can sometimes be made indirectly regarding mental conditions "sometimes seen in similar cases" and as the patient gathers confidence she is apt to tell more of herself, especially when she finds she is not alone in her trouble. Her dreams can best be controlled by holding to the thought, "I will not dream so; I will wake up (or change it)" just as she falls asleep. It is difficult to carry a waking idea into the sleeping consciousness, but it can be done with practice by holding the idea to the last gleam of wakefulness as she falls asleep. A sleepless patient should make a particular effort to quiet herself through the evening and not to indulge at that time in any reading, conversation or occupation that is exciting to her. On lying down to sleep at night, when counting the traditional sheep, etc, fails to gain the desired result, let her try stopping every thought that enters her mind the instant it appears while holding herself perfectly quiet and as relaxed as possible. This will keep her stopping her thoughts about every second but she will often drop asleep very suddenly after a little. Or she may hold her mind to the idea of her toe or the door knob,—an uninteresting thought which becomes monotonous enough to allow her to fall asleep. A patient troubled with over much erotic excitement should beware of letting her mind drift at any time on thoughts of sexual matters, especially in the evening. She should always turn to some occupation, reading or study on other subjects and especially beware of lying idly in bed after waking in the morning. If too ill to rise at once, let her provide herself with books, or some mental occupation that she can take up as soon as she is fairly awake. Patients can help themselves greatly in these and other ways, although no two are affected exactly alike and the mental states vary with the individual's differing characteristics, training and power of self control.

The pain may be brought somewhat under the patient's will as well. Byron Robinson says: "It is true in gynecology we are dealing chiefly with the subjective sensations of the patient. The pain appears to the patient as immeasurably severe and terrible. Frequently the only standard is the patient's tears, fears or moans, and her comparison of dragging, tearing or boring. We can to some extent estimate colic pains of hollow organs as uterine and intestinal conditions. But it is remarkable how gynecologic patients bear the genuine pain of labor and other colicky pains with little complaint and slight fear of its repetition; while the immeasurable and often apparently non-genuine pain of hyperesthesia causes exaggerated and bitter complaints. The intensity of pain can be supposed but never sharply measured. An exudate can be palpated, the amount of blood loss judged, the growth of a tumor estimated, but the determination of pain rests alone on the dogmatic assertion of the patient." Arouse the patient to an understanding of her exaggerated symptoms in this respect, set her to a determined denial of the pain after the method of a mental healer, and much may be done, depending on the patient's faith and mental energy.

Sometimes a bad habit as masturbation, is at the bottom of much of the patient's trouble. This she is not likely to confess except in rare cases. The doctor may be informed of it by a relative or surmise it from physical signs present, or miss it altogether, if those signs are absent, as they sometimes are in the milder cases of such habits. Here the patient's own efforts are indispensable to a cure, her confidence is very necessary to the practitioner and difficult to obtain. Further a habit of the sort is often almost impossible to break. It requires the patient's utmost efforts combined with inexhaustible patience and sympathy on the doctor's part, but it can be done. Young girls are sometimes led into such habits by their playmates, not knowing in the least what harm they are doing, and to get at the facts may require the greatest tact and adroitness on the part of the doctor, whose methods must be determined largely by his own individuality as well as the individuality of his patient.

And this last applies to the whole subject under discussion, making it one of the most difficult phases of gynecological work, a line of practice in which, more than in any other, success depends on the degree of personal understanding between doctor and patient. All physicians need patience, sympathy, and a knowledge of psychology in dealing with their clientele, but the gynecologist needs those qualities in double amount,—they particularly appertain to success in his sphere of work.

Infantile Paralysis

(Clinic at Annual Meeting of A. O. A., at Jamestown. Presentation of subject and history by Dr. Marie B Walkup, Roanoke, Va.: lecture and demonstration by Dr. H. W. Forbes.)

When the subject, now 24 years old, was six months of age she had "spasms" before which she was a healthy child. At the age of two years she had another, what was called by the doctor, "spasm." She was four years old before she walked at all, and then very little; at eight the arm and leg began to contract, and at ten she had brace applied to foot which has been worn more or less since. I have treated her at intervals for the past two and a half years; never more than two or three months at a time as after that length of time there seems to be no improvement, then after an interval, the treatment would be resumed. She had had some osteopathic treatment before coming to me, when she could not raise her arm above an angle of 45 degrees. Arm and fingers at that time were badly drawn. When she first took treatment there was a constant jerk to the side and a hop to her walk, which will still return occasionally. The leg has improved and lengthened so that she walks with much more ease than when first treated. There is a curvature in the dorsal spine. This has been considerably straightened. The innominate is still anterior but not so bad as when I first treated her. My treatment has been directed to the curvature, to strengthen and relax these muscles to the affected limbs. Her condition has been greatly improved by treatment. It is not known whether there was temperature at the time of the first spasms or not nor is there any information as to whether instruments were used at delivery. She was considered a healthy child until the spasms at six months of age. I want the judgment of those present whether further treatment will be still helpful or whether surgical attention will be effective to foot. (Dr. H. W. Forbes takes charge of clinic) Without going further into the history at the present time, let us examine and determine whether this is a lesion in the spinal cord, or a lesion in the brain.

Anatomy and Physiology

All of you are sufficiently familiar with nervous anatomy and physiology to know that this paralysis may be due either to a lesion of the cerebrum or upper motor neuron, or to the spinal or lower motor neuron. From the cerebral cortex down to the centre in the spinal cord, medulla pons, and mid-brain, there extends a fibre, the cortico-spinal neuron. Another nerve cell with its processes extends from this point to the periphery, and nerve impulse passing from the brain to the mid-brain, pons, medulla, and cord is then transmitted to a second neuron, and carried to the muscle cell at the periphery. In cases of paralysis, the lesion is to the neuron extending from the cortex to the centres in the cord, medulla, pons, and mid-brain, or to the neuron extending from the cord to the periphery. The first thing, then, in diagnosis is to determine whether this is a lesion to the upper or cortico-spinal neuron, or to the lower or spinomuscular neuron. This differentiation is easy. If the lesion is to the upper or corticospinal neuron the muscles will be spastic. There will be no atrophy and the reflexes will be exaggerated. If the lesion is to the lower or spinomuscular neuron, the muscles will be atrophied and the reflexes will be lost, and the muscles will be flaccid. It is easy to tell the difference between an exaggerated and lost reflex, and a flaccid and spastic muscle. In the corticospinal lesion the muscles do not atrophy, and in the spinomuscular lesion they do. I may say in passing that in cases where the lesion is to the corticospinal neuron the side of the body affected does not develop as much as the other side. Under-development must not be confounded with atrophy. The right side of the body never was affected. The left side of the face was involved. (Patient wrinkles forehead and frowns). You will observe the left side of the face is weak, as the patient smiles. In laughter any difference in the two sides is very readily recognized. The left arm and leg are not developed as much as the right. The muscles of the left side of the body are spastic. Observe these extreme bends, as a lead pipe bends. I start to flex it, and it resists, I start to extend it and it resists. Under continued pressure it bends, and the further it bends the less it resists, hence the name lead-pipe resistance. This is a sign of spastic muscles. (Now tests reflexes). The left elbow, patellar and Achilles tendon reflex are exaggerated. The sensation in the paralyzed side is normal. The signs here present are exaggerated reflexes, spastic muscles, and no atrophy. This is conclusive proof that the lesion is only affecting the corticospinal and not the spinomuscular neuron.

(In reply to a question) Yes, this is infantile paralysis.

Infantile paralysis is subdivided into cerebro-infantile paralysis, and spino-infantile paralysis. This case is one of cerebro-infantile paralysis, or technically cerebro-infantile hemiplegia. A spinal infantile paralysis is what we ordinarily speak of as infantile paralysis or poliomyelitis anterior. If you could examine her spinal cord, medulla, pons, and mid-brain, you would find them normal, but if you should examine the right cerebral cortex, you would find it abnormal.

Nature of the Causative Lesion

What was the nature of this lesion? The probabilities are strong it was hemorrhage. The larger number of cerebral infantile paralyses is due to hemorrhage, and this hemorrhage might have been repeated, and the convulsion might have corresponded and probably did, with the onset of the hemorrhage. The cause of this movement is therefore altogether problematical, as we have not enough history to go further into the origin of the condition. The nature of it is clear.

Now, what of the treatment? What can we do with such cases? In the treatment of these cases the first question one asks himself is what can be done towards removing the condition of the cerebrum? The next question is what may be done toward overcoming these peripheral conditions which are effects of the cerebral lesion? This patient was but six months old when this affliction came. As a general rule all these cases continue to improve through the period of growth and development. When growth is completed the tendency is for the improvement to be arrested. Now, what are the possibilities of regeneration? Such nerve cells as have been destroyed are dead, and a dead cell cannot live again. We must admit a certain amount of destruction which is irreparable. The establishment of the most perfect circulation is a condition essential to reproduction and repair; and as much repair as may be obtained will be obtained under favorable conditions of circulation and nutrition. After the repair has been completed, and after such reproduction as may possibly occur has been finished, our next question is, is there any possibility of compensating for the remaining tissue defect? In this case the extent and kind of tissue destruction exceeded the limits of reproduction. Repair occurred but the original condition of the part was not restored. Nerve tissue has been replaced by connective tissue. The next question arising is, may this be compensated for in any other way? There is the same possibility of collateral circulation of nervous energies as there is of blood. The more we study nervous physiology and the more we learn about the circulation of nervous energies, the more firmly the truth is impressed upon us that there is the same condition of collateral circulation in the nervous system that there is in the vascular system. I would not have you get the idea that I hold that nervous energy is a fluid similar to blood, but we may use the blood circulation as an illustration. Thus under the influence of exercise, and under the influence of normal nutritive conditions, there will in all of those cases be a tendency toward a re-establishment of functions along new, albeit imperfect lines, but still, a tendency toward a re-establishment of it. From the opposite cortex, and probably from other neurons in this cortex connections will be formed between the brain and the lower motor-neuron centres. Probably from the age of six months up to thirty years, almost as much compensation has occurred as is possible to occur. If there are defects in the neck or in the spine, which are interfering with circulation, then we would not consider that we had done all we might do for the patient until those were corrected.

The Cause of Deformity

The next question is what may be done for the peripheral effects of the lesion, that is, for the spasticity, contracture, and deformities, such as this condition of talipes equinovarus. Why was this foot deformed? Why is there a tendency to a deformity at the shoulder? Why is the forearm held in flexion, and pronation? Why is the wrist flexed? Simply this: All of the muscles on the left side of the body are removed from normal connection with the right cortex. There is as much reduction in energy from the cortex to the flexors as there is to the extensors. Now when the cortical influence is withdrawn, the extremities will take the position determined for them by the stronger muscles, and it is a physiological law that flexors are stronger than extensors, pronators are stronger than supinators, and the adductors are stronger than abductors, hence all of those muscles receiving an equal volume of nervous energy, the stronger muscles will prevail and determine the position of the joints.

Now the range of use is much greater than before treatment. There has been no improvement to the foot deformity. Under the influence of manipulation of these muscles and spinal treatment, spasticity tends to disappear, not permanently, but only while under treatment. As long as this case is treated the spasticity will be minimized, but if she goes for any period without treatment, it will tend to recur.

A glance will show you that the condition of the foot is an extreme one of talipes equinovarus. This condition has been developing gradually from the time the spasticity appeared shortly after the onset of this paralysis when the patient was six months of age to the present time, almost twenty-five years. A constant deforming force has been operating. The bone deformity present is extreme. The shape of all the tarsal bones deviates widely from the normal. The unequal strength of the spastic muscles of the leg and foot has exposed one side of these bones to the greater pressure than the other; as a consequence of the pressure, atrophy has resulted. Bones are readily deformed from continued pressure, and the mechanism of this is not different in a club foot and a lateral curvature of the spine. Considering the amount of deformity present, and the age and condition of the patient it is safe to say that this condition cannot be completely overcome by manipulation, or any form of surgical interference. Several month's treatment has been given, and the patient does not notice any marked improvement. Whether continued treatment would effect a material change or not is uncertain, but I think extremely doubtful. The question is asked, might this condition have been prevented? Yes, sir. If treatment had been begun at once, before contractions occurred, and continued persistently, the deformity would have been largely prevented.

Spinal Examination

Let us now proceed to the spinal examination. (Patient sitting on a stool). First let us determine the amount of movement in the spine. This is satisfactorily accomplished by taking the movements of the cervical dorsal, and lumbar region saparately.

Measurement of Spinal Regions

We measure the cervical flexion by placing the tape on the spinous process of the axis, and the seventh cervical vertebra. As the patient bends the neck forward from the upright position, we note a fraction over two centimetres of movement. This is less than the normal range of movement for this region. The movement of the occiput on the atlas is determined by placing the tape on the external occipital protuberance and the spine of the seventh cervical vertebra. You observe less than three centimetres of movement. In a normal case the amount of flexion between the occiput and the atlas almost equals that of the entire remaining cervical column. In this case the amount of flexion between the external occipital protuberance and the seventh cervical is less than a centimetre greater than that between the axis and the seventh cervical, consequently there is great reduction between the movement of the occiput and the atlas. This is one of the most positive signs of lesion. It makes no difference which one of the ten regular lesions of the occiput are present, the movement will be reduced. The lesion present in this case is a bi-lateral posterior occipital. The amount of flexion in the dorsal spine is estimated by placing one end of the tape on the spine at the seventh cervical, and the other on the twelfth dorsal. It will be observed that the flexion between the seventh cervical and first dorsal is included in the movements of the dorsal spine, and the movement between the twelfth dorsal and first lumbar is excluded. The reason for this is obvious. The seventh cervical in the formation of its inferior articular facets, and in its movements is like a dorsal vertebra, while the twelfth dorsal in the formation of its inferior articular facets, and in its movement is like a lumbar vertebra, hence from a standpoint of movements, lesions, etc., the seventh cervical is a dorsal vertebra, and the twelfth dorsal is a lumbar vertebra. An osteopathic anatomist will some day probably describe the occiput and atlas as one region of the spine, the axis to the seventh cervical inclusive as a second, the seventh cervical to the eleventh dorsal inclusive as a third, and the twelfth dorsal to the fifth lumbar inclusive as a fourth. You observe that the amount of flexion between the seventh cervical and twelfth dorsal is about one centimetre. On further examination we note that this movement occurs between the ninth and tenth, tenth and eleventh, and eleventh and twelfth, while from the seventh cervical to the ninth dorsal no appreciable movement exists.

Let us now measure the amount of flexion in the lumbar spine. We do this by placing one end of the tape on the twelfth dorsal spinous process, and the other on the first spinous process of the sacrum. You note that the flexion in this region is less than three centimetres. This is less than half the amount of movement she should have in this region. The tape reveals reduction in the spinal movements from the occiput to the sacrum. This may be produced by lesions, muscular rigidity, lack of use, etc. It is not possible to determine the rotation and side bending in these various regions without satisfactory apparatus. You may observe that these are likewise reduced, but we cannot make a specific record without apparatus. Note that the lateral flexion in the dorsal region is less on side bending to the right than it is toward the left. This is explained by the existence of a right lateral curvature.

Let us now palpate the spine to discover whether any lesions of individual vertebrae exist. The occiput is bi-lateral posterior; the signs of this are anterior borders of the transverse processes of the atlas closer to the ramus of the jaw than normal, posterior borders of the transverse processes in front of a vertical line dropped from the apex of the mastoids, restricted movement in the occipito-atlantal articulation, and accentuated cervical curvature. The axis is anterior on the right. The signs of these are right transverse process of the axis moved forward in relation to that of the third cervical, restricted movement, and the presence of a compensatory lesion on the left. This compensatory lesion is located between the fifth and sixth, the right transverse process of the fifth is in advance of that of the sixth. That this is a compensatory lesion is manifest because the movement is normal; and when the head is turned toward the left the fifth moves backward to its normal position.

The third dorsal is slightly lateral to the right. Signs of these are spinous process of the third lateral to the right of the fourth, no movement between the third and fourth, and the existence of a compensatory lesion of the second to the left on the third. Movement between the second and third, no movement between the third and fourth, indicates that the third is the primary, and the second the compensatory lesion.

A question: What is the comparative prognosis in infantile spinal paralysis, and infantile cerebral paralysis?

This question is difficult to answer briefly. As a general rule, more recovery will occur in the cases of infantile spinal paralysis than the other. Immediately following the onset of infantile spinal paralysis, the extent of the paralysis is frequently great, improvement begins in about three weeks, and proceeds rapidly for two or three months, after which improvement is slow, but continues up to the age of full development. Many of these cases recover sufficiently to walk without artificial assistance, and with little limp. On the other hand, when the anterior horns of the cord are extensively degenerated over several segments a permanent total paralysis may result. Inasmuch as the brain is not affected they undergo practically a normal mental development.

In the cases of infantile cerebral paralysis, many die at the outset, and a large percentage of the remainder develop contractures which more or less disable them throughout life. The cerebral lesion usually retards mental development. In both cases the prognosis is better if intelligent treatment is pursued constantly from the outset, and although under treatment, begun years after the acute lesion, some improvement will occur, yet one should always give a guarded prognosis in such cases.

The Spine

BEN S. ADSIT, D. O., FRANKLIN, KY.

Anatomy is that branch of osteopathy which treats of, or, describes the different organs and tissues of the body. To understand the structure of the body, it first becomes necessary that we have a thorough knowledge of the framework upon which the body is built. This, we might say, is the key-note of osteopathy, and the principle key upon which we play is the spinal column.

When patients present themselves for osteopathic examination, and we run our fingers up and down the spinous processes to see if they have deviated from the normal line, and if we find that they have, it immediately springs into the mind of the examining physician whether it is lesion or not. The pathognomonic sign that controls this decision is disturbance of the function of the organs and tissues which are fed by the nerves which emerge from the intervertebral foramina corresponding to the lesion. Soreness and tenderness are fairly accurate in aid to a diagnosis, but can be caused by many other disturbances than a subluxation. We frequently find a spinous process that has deviated from the normal line that does not present soreness nor disturbance of function and anatomy teaches us that a spinous process may be over-or under-developed which would resemble an anterior or posterior slip, that it may be deflected to one side or the other which would resemble a lateral, that it may be bifid in the cervical region and one of the bifurcations usually exceeds the other in length which may be felt upon one side of the normal line and mistaken for a lateral, and if moved, would create a pathological condition.

To distinguish between these conditions, I offer a few anatomical rules, while not infallible, they are fairly accurate and will aid in a diagnosis.

Two points to be remembered are that a slip of a vertebra must correspond to the shape and direction of the articular process and the movements permitted in that region of the spine. In this way, and in no other, can it slip without fracture of the articular processes. Also, bear in mind that this talk deals with a single vertebra and not a spinal curve.

Taking up first the lumbar region, a lateral slip in a perfectly horizontal or transverse plane is a matter of impossibilty. We can have a lateral slip, but it must correspond to the lines of the lateral flexion and in this case, the upper border of the spinous process would look upward and outward, the lower border downward and inward, no matter to which side it was turned and it would involve the vertebra above and below. To distinguish between the over or under developed processes and an anterior or posterior slip, I can offer no anatomical rule. It has been suggested that we may detect this by our knowledge of the normal tension of the supra spinous ligaments. Approximations and separations of this region as well as the entire column should be readily recognized.

The dorsal articular process will not permit of either a direct anterior or posterior slip. There can be an anterior or posterior tilt. In the former, there would be an approximation of the upper border of the spinous process of the subluxated vertebra to the lower border of the one above. Exactly the opposite condition would act in the posterior tilt but in either case the vertebra above and below would be involved. Laterals predominate in this region owing to the fact that here rotation is freest. The slip of any vertebra in the dorsal must involve four ribs, except the 11th and 12th and possibly the 10th. In this case, the vertebra would be the primary and the ribs the secondary lesion.

The cervical regions, with the exception of the articulation between the atlas and and axis will permit of a slip in any direction. Some of them can not always be felt, so here we must rely upon the disturbance of function and what we can make out by palpation of the transverse, owing to the obliquity of the articular processes. In the anterior slip the spinous processes would approach the one above and the posterior the one below. Between the atlas and axis, the abnormality most often found is rotation. A posterior slip is impossible. While disputed by many, it is my firm belief that the anterior slip is also impossible, except in younger life.

I wish I could go deeper and explain the effects of a spinal lesion upon the various structures of the body, but I can go no farther than the osteopathic profession has already gone, and it will go no farther until we can demonstrate the effects of the lesion. A great many of these we know by actual experience and results; some by the results of others; some we will never know, unless some competent and untiring person devotes his time and energy to the discovery and proof. I repeat that a great many of these we already know, but ask many of the teachers in the schools, or the practitioners in the field, for their opinions upon this subject and you will find that you will have just as many different answers as the ingredients of a famous compound of which I once knew which was composed of roots, herbs, gums, blossoms, berries and barks. We are teaching pathology in our schools to-day, and our students are advanced in this branch as well as those of other schools which reflects with credit upon the students, schools and profession, but behind all of this there is something deeper. The more we know about the spinal lesion, the original idea of Dr. A. T. Still, the better able we are going to be to handle the patients who come under our charge and to give to the world an unchallenged system of healing. To stop with no further knowledge upon this subject would be unfair to our future patients; to the osteopathic students who are to take our places and the basest of ingratitude to the father of our science, who discovered it, and like thegre at, good man he is, so freely gave it to the world.

Notice

Since the publication in the July Journal of my remarks on "Occipital Lesions," Doctor McConnell has informed me that both his "Practice" and McConnell & Teall's "Practice" give some consideration to occipital lesions.

It is therefore due Doctor McConnell from me to say that I should have mentioned his "Practice" (1899 edition) as containing probably the earliest recognition of occipital lesions to be found in any osteopathic text.

I am glad to make this correction in justice to one who has done much for the advancement of osteopathy along various lines; but my main contention, that at least till very recently occipital lesions have been very generally overlooked or confounded with atlas lesions by both practitioners and text writers still holds true.

"And the Greatest of These is 'Original Research'"

It hardly seems necessary to refer to the wonderful development of osteopathy; and yet neither is it necessary when making a plea for increased effort along new lines to ignore that we have gradually built up from the mere incident of the accidental adjustment of a dorsal vertebra,—from the first crude idea of anatomical structure adjustment—to the little school house with its handful of students consecrated to an idea; to the red brick college, with hospitals, nurses home and school; to other colleges, sixteen hundred students, five thousand practitioners; from legal right in one state to recognition in forty; from a few believers in a new school of therapeutics, a new philosophy in cause of disease to eight hundred thousand followers. This is but a skimming reference to the gigantic achievements of the osteopath beginning with Dr. A. T. Still and his little band of workers.

Attention is called to the progress, growth and advancement in osteopathic development, in higher education, in legislation, to perfected organizations, that it may not be thought that any one of these is for a moment lost sight of, but because it marks the exception, at this time all the more plainly. In every department of the science are there well directed energetic efforts noted, save in one. In every direction the osteopathic finger points with pride to results, save in one. We have advanced in "double quick," but now as we look back, every step in our development seems but the result of a natural evolution.

But now we approach another period in the growth of our career and we do so without the slightest feeling of pessimism ; we appreciate in the very highest degree that the creative power of osteopathic minds is a mental attitude of optimism. The seed of research, is in the ground, in many instances in active growth, in others the fruit is here and we have partaken.

Hence let it be remembered that the object of this communication is to stimulate, to arouse, those far-seeing minds to the necessity of immediate action. Let us not rest with a feeling of fancied security ; let us not forget that the handwriting on the wall is for us.

"Original Scientific Research."

The very fact that we have grown into a great school of practice ; have become a factor raised to the third power in healing art ; that osteopathy is accepted as a science, make the demands of science all the more portentious, unless we obey this last and loudest call.

As Dr. McConnell voices this same sentiment ; "The two fundamentals of our present development absolutely demands immediate and unified action along the lines of national legislative organization and definite scientfic exploitation." "The cooperation of every osteopath is required." "Every one is equally concerned." "It means our future existence, nothing more nor less."

We should place "scientific exploitation" first.

Place osteopathy on a firm scientific foundation of laboratory evidence, and we can go before any legislative body in the land, and receive the recognition we want, and as we want it.

When we thoroughly consider the questions, "what has proven the greatest benefit to our progress?" "what have you done?" is it any of the steps of our evolution, herein mentioned, that gives us the greatest feeling of security ? No, it is the scientific researches of Still, McConnell, Burns, the late Dr. Hulett, Forbes, Clark, etc., that we quote as most representative of our progress and growth and as answers to such assertions. And yet in this great forest of research, we have but blazed a narrow trail ; only a narrow trail, straight and true, that admits the white light of a new philosophy; but we must delve deeper, develop and broaden, and thus more strongly entrench osteopathy in that department where it is most needed. We are today very little nearer to established research laboratories than we were two years ago; and in this delay, procrastination is our inexcusable error of judgement. The caution that advises a policy of waiting, is the policy of obstruction. It is this caution, that is fear, that knows not its own mind, that has already wasted another year of valuable time in delay. It will not be a difficult matter to begin original research now; true, we must use some of our principal as well as the interest of the endowment fund.

Original research must be carried forward by the A. T. Still Post Graduate College; by laboratories devoted to research in every osteopathic college; by research of the individual practitioner; by a demanding an original thesis from every senior student as a requisite for graduation; by original research carried on by senior students, under guidance of their teachers. Colleges must appreciate the value of laboratory methods, as meeting the highest demands of advanced education. Subject the philosophy of osteopathy to the every known method of research; let the importance of laboratory work, the spirit of inquiry, move every osteopath to remember, that "every man is a debtor to his profession." Let us question to the very end every claim made by us; let our assertions be based on scientific experimental evidence, and not upon the evidence of individual reasoning, a vivid imagination, an enduring right arm and a sharp pencil. Let problems be assigned to local osteopathic societies in every city; to individuals special investigations selected with a view to the facilities the individual has for doing them; bring into activity as much work as it is possible so arouse.

The writer sent out a number of letters recently in which he asked the question: What are some of the problems in scientific osteopathic research that should be demonstrated? How would you proceed?

Great interest was shown in these questions, and the answers include suggestions in Anatomy, Physiology, Hygiene, Pathology, Etiology, Comparative Anatomy, Physiology and Technique, use of all instruments for diagnosis, special problems that demand elucidation, in fact the entire field of scientific osteopathy, was touched upon.

Let every reader of these two questions prepare the answer in writing, and submit them to the secretary at the convention; in all probability you will also be asked for them; in this way again aiding this work by bringing together a very large number of individual ideas, that will aid very materially in the final assigning of these problems.

And now we meet again in convention, we will discuss the vital issues in which we are all most deeply concerned, regarding "Original research." Let it be remembered no great amount of talking is necessary; it is simply a question, will you do your part?

It is not a question of money expenditure, but a question of "will you give your time and mind to the work?"

And in conclusion let it be said, that if you cannot see the vital importance of doing scientific work at once, then are you totally blind to the greatest need in osteopathic development.

St. Louis, Mo. HERMAN F. GOETZ, D. O.

Victory in Louisiana.

A bare dozen osteopaths in Louisiana have just won perhaps the most notable achievement in the history of osteopathic legislation.

They accomplished this by making reasonable demands of the legislature and sticking right to it, and in the closing hours of the session, their measure passed with feeble opposition and was signed by the governor; and this in the face of the most determined opposition on the part of the medical organizations. A few months before the legislature assembled the medical people held meetings in every district in the state and Dr. McCormack, their agitator, made popular addresses all over the state; but the legislature seemed to have a sense of fair play. It revised the medical laws along the lines asked for by the medical profession except as regards its disposition of the practice of osteopathy, and then it gave the osteopaths what they asked for.

The point is this: The osteopaths stood out for a measure that would make it possible for others to come into the state, it spite of the fact that the medical men, when it seemed that they controlled the situation, offered to make full fledged physicians and surgeons out of all in the state, but they would also make the conditions under which any others should come into the state. It required good nerve to resist this, but to the credit of the Louisiana Society, they resisted, and as a result they have perhaps the most satistactory measure we have yet secured. The bill is more liberal than any yet enacted in regard to taking in graduates from irregular schools now practicing in the state; but this is a local matter and one in which the profession at large has no concern. In its broader provisions — reciprocity as to licensed osteopaths in other states, and reasonable conditions for new graduates to enter the state — matters in which practitioners every where are concerned, the measure is well framed.

If enactments in all the states were such as are enactments in some of the states and remained so, we who are now in practice would be the last practitioners; and in a few years our schools would be practically closed, for there would be no where for their graduates to practice; but if all our statutes were as this Louisiana statute seems to be, every qualified osteopath might practice in any state where his preference should lead him. The entire profession is under obligation to the Louisiana Society for its success in securing the enactment of this measure.

The editorial writer in The Outlook impelled by his obsession against Bryan makes use of the following comparison; "Bryanism is in politics what osteopathy is in medicine. There are diseases of the bones: but they are not the only diseases from which humanity suffers."

If this writer is no more familiar with politics than this uncalled for and inappropriate sally into science shows him to be there, it would be much better for his readers if he were to confine his observations to the weather or some subject familiar to him.

Publicity and Osteopathy

THE JOURNAL takes pleasure in calling special attention to a popular article on osteopathy printed in the September Cosmopolitan. It also notes with much satisfaction that an article by Dr. E. M. Downing or York, Pa. is soon to appear in the Metropolitan magazine. The new Americana, published by the Scientific American, contains two excellent articles on osteopathy, by Drs. Pressly and Littlejohn. This willingness on the part of magazines to produce these articles is encouraging but the real thing is the information they give the public. Perhaps no one article in recent years has been so widely read and copied as that by Dr. Still in the Ladies Home Journal last winter This education of the public is perfectly legitimate an equally necessary. We quote from a private letter from a correspondent on the Pacific coast:

Your recommendation for an A. O. A. organizer appears to me as excellent. As a student in a medical college, I feel I know something of the general medical attitude toward us. Briefly and generally, they hate us; we are ignorant intruders; we are merely an "ism" or "fad" along with Christian Science, and must be suppressed.

The remedy for us lies in greater proficiency as individuals and wider publicity for our science. The name osteopathy and its distinctive therapeutics must be known in every home and its practitioners must thoroughly understand their art.

I used to be lukewarm but I have suffered a few sharp thrusts lately from medical men in whom I placed some faith and am beginning to see that the little respect shown me is purely personal and that they despise what I stand for just as heartily as though they had never known me.

I'm getting nearer the boiling point each time I witness the efforts of medical measures in recent issues of the various journals to promulgate among the profession certain methods and discoveries that are manifestly thefts. Osteopathy is entitled to the credit of much that has been developed along the line indicated and our people need a vigorous awakening from an apathy which if long continued, will seal our fate.

Organization and "booming" are legitimate, and more than that, are necessary. I congratulate you on your idea and its vigorous presentation, and trust it will bear abundant fruit.

This is quoted not because it approves of the suggestion made in the Journal but because it illustrates the point under discussion, the need of publicity. Another friend from New England writes urging the pressing of the point of getting a man in the field that the Association may be brought into contact with every practitioner that each practitioner may feel that he has the association and every other practitioner back of him, that our organizations may be cemented and our institutions, schools, magazines, etc. may be supported. There is room for serious thought along this line and action at Kirksville.

Many members are writing regarding Case Reports, not having received a series this year. This delay has been caused by the overwork of Dr. Ashmore, the Editor. She was compelled to have rest and spend several months on the Pacific coast. The first series, perhaps the second, is now ready and will be mailed to all members about August 1.

Are You Going to Kirksville?

If not, why not? This is to be no ordinary meeting. It is not held to simply transact the business of the Association and carry out an excellent scientific program. It is held to give the opportunity to every osteopath to pay a mark of respect and tribute of gratitude to Dr. Still; not so much for the brilliancy of his discovery, but for the fact that he so generously gave it to the world. This is the feature of his life that places every one of us under obligations to him, and on his eightieth birthday, we all have the opportunity of showing him that we appreciate these obligations.

It may not be known to all that Dr. Still had the opportunity of making himself rich by letting osteopathy die. He suffered the hardships of poverty and ostracism, that osteopathy might survive and be given to the world. We are the direct beneficiaries of this noble act and we now have the time to show that we appreciate it.

Of course, no time will suit every one. Of course, some cannot attend. But every osteopath should make the effort of his life to be in Kirksville, Thursday, August 6. This meeting is not for members of the association only. It is a national meeting in which the alumni of one school will be no more welcome or wanted than these of all schools. Let each reader of this come and try to bring some brother practitioner who is not a member. This has been an off year in finances in most parts of the country, and collections have been poor; the railroads have not cooperated as heartily as they should have done to make it economical for us to attend; the summer has been hot, and to many the long ride across the plains does not seem attractive as a rest or vacation; but to attend this meeting is a duty laid at the door of us all, and a privilege we shall not likely have again—that of joining a loyal, loving band to make glad the heart of Andrew Taylor Still. Expression of our gratitude and appreciation is all we can do, shall we do that?

Railroad Arrangements to Kirksville.

Up to date of going to press, the passenger associations representing the railroads in the Atlantic Coast states have not agreed to enter into the arrangements made by the roads in the Middle West and West on account of Kirksville meeting. So that, unless the roads in the East do enter into this arrangement before the time of the meeting, and this can be ascertained from local agent, in purchasing tickets from the East on account of the meeting it will be best to get a ticket to Buffalo, Pittsburg or Cincinnati and then purchase round trip ticket from that point to Kirksville. From these points we get a very good rate — to wit: from Buffalo to Kirksville and return, via. the Wabash is $29.35 and on other lines approximately the same. From Pittsburg it would be considerably less. Tickets on sale July 30 to August 4, good to return to August 15.

Reader, if you are going to Kirksville, and of course you are, if you have not reserved that room, better do it at once. The Pool Hotel gives room and board, two to room, $2 per day each. Rooms in private families one dollar per day and up. Write to Dr. H. M. Still, Convention Secretary.

"WHAT IS OSTEOPATHY?"

(This is the subject of one of the leading articles in the September issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, by Belle Case Harrington, a prominent young magazine writer of Bowling Green, Ohio. Several extracts from this article are printed below, and this issue of Cosmopolitan will be found a most attractive one for osteopaths to have on their reading tables and put in the hands of people interested in osteopathy. The magazine will be on the news stands, price 15c, about the first of August but as the supply is likely to be limited, better order the number wanted from the publishers, No. 2 Duane St., New York City. The quotations below given are perhaps sufficient to cause the reader to see the value of this article printed in one of the leading popular magazines. Editor.)

"In the treatment of disease the great difference between the osteopath's method and that of the regular physician lies, of course, in the fact that osteopaths use no medicine except, perhaps, an occasional salve or lotion in skin troubles, or an antidote in case of poisoning. The medical practitioner calls, makes his diagnosis, leaves the remedies indicated for his patient's ailment, and goes away, depending upon his medicine to do the work. The osteopath makes his diagnosis, then must remain and administer his treatment 'from the shoulder,' as one might say. The prophylactic value of osteopathy is great. . . .

"In diagnosis, the osteopath uses all the methods common to the regular physician, but in the determination of spinal lesions he pays particular attention to palpation, i. e., examination by touch. The experienced osteopath possesses in his finger tips a power of diagnosis which is almost marvelous. While by no means ignoring symptoms, he more often finds his clue to the real trouble in some irregularity of bone or ligament or muscle—causes which are commonly considered unimportant by the regular physician. . . .

"The corporations realize the value of this kind of examination, and thousands of dollars saved every month through the keen discernment of their osteopathic advisers. In the adjustment of damage cases resulting from personal injury, the opinion of a competent osteopath is of great value, as he can readily detect the frauds which are so often practised in such instances. Osteopaths are often called upon for expert testimony in court, and as examining physicians for insurance and railroad companies they are considered especially competent. . . .

"One of the most dramatic incidents connected with the achievements of osteopathy is the case of Mrs. Helen Delendrice, whose husband is termed 'the merchant prince of the Dakotas.' Mrs. Delendrice was affected with what the leading surgeons of the United States term cancer of the breast; one operation had been performed and another seemed imminent, with slight hope of saving her life. She consulted competent osteopaths, who pronounced her disease not cancer, but a curable malady. Her complete restoration to health attracted universal attention, and the following year she appeared before the North Dakota legislature, and by her personal plea secured the passage of a bill giving osteopaths the right to practise in that state. . . .

"Many cases of asthma of long standing have been permanently relieved by this treatment. In fact, one of the 'old doctor's' first and most spectacular cures was performed upon an asthmatic patient. He was driving along a country road when he came to a dooryard in which was a group of excited people. In their midst was a man, propped up in a chair, fairly fighting for breath. His friends looked on helpless, apparently expecting his death at any moment. Doctor Still saw at once that the man was suffering from asthma. He brushed the onlookers aside, and striding up to the sufferer, he began to examine and manipulate the spine, giving the man almost instant relief. Friends looked on, incredulous, while the rescued man exclaimed: 'My God! What have you done? I didn't suppose anyone but the Almighty could ease me like that.' "

REPORT FROM LOUISIANA SOCIETY.

The Louisiana Society wishes to acknowledge through The Journal the following contributions in addition to the $152 reported last month: Iowa Osteopathic Association, $25; Missouri Association, $15; Wisconsin Association, $50; Dr. Asa Willard, $5; total, $95. An error occurred in the last report in that a contribution of $6 was credited to the New England Society when it should have been the New Hampshire Society. The Osteopaths of Louisiana are deeply grateful for the help rendered them.

DOCTOR DOWNING COMMENTS ON FUNDAMENTALS OF PATHOLOGY.

Noting with much interest Doctor Tucker's comments on Doctor Dufur's paper on "Reflexes," and the conclusions they both draw as to the fundamentals of pathology, I could not but be impressed with two paragraphs of Doctor Tucker's. They are found at the bottom of page 452 and the top of page 453 of the July Journal.

If it is not out of place I should like to quote in this connection a few lines from my discussion of gallstones at St. Louis, published in the Journal of the A. O. A. for March, 1905.

In speaking of the fact that certain lesions, namely, vertebral and costal, eighth to twelfth inclusive, may be present in cases of gastric or intestinal disturbances, disorders of the liver, diseases of the pancreas, or in gallstones, I asked whether if such diverse pathology were found to exist when a certain single lesion was present, it did not argue against the specific osteopathic lesion philosophy. My answer was, "By no means." I continued:

"Given then such a lesion as has been mentioned, what determines the specific nature of the resultant disease? Hazzard says: 'Some particular form, degree or concentration of lesion.' I would say rather, some secondary lesion, perhaps not distinguishable by palpation or other means known to us, but determining the character of the functional disturbance. But more probably, and in my judgment almost certainly, the predisposition to one or another disease induced by a common spinal lesion, is largely on account of heredity, sex, constitution or habit, as above enumerated. In general, the same rule applies in other spinal lesions.

"Some unbeliever asks: 'If spinal lesion is responsible for these conditions, why do they not all prevail in all cases where the lesions are apparently similar?' I would answer like this: When through some predisposition or secondary lesion the effect of a primary spinal lesion is manifested in a certain organ, the burden of the results of the primary lesion is sustained by that organ, nature's law of compensation maintaining so far as possible the equilibrium of the related structures."

While this was advanced only tentatively or hypothetically, my observations during the intervening years have led me to believe that I was not far from the truth in making a "scapegoat," as Doctor Tucker calls it, of the "secondary lesion," whether it be a structural fault that is palpable, or a mere predisposition.

Doctor Tucker's diagram makes the case a very plain one, and he is to be congratulated on his happy faculty of expression.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The ninth annual meeeting of the Pennsylvania Osteopathic Association (Incorporated) was held in the hall of the Board of Trade Building, Harrisburg, June 26th and 27th.

Dr. W. L. Grubb of Pittsburgh presented a paper on "The Law of the Movements of the Spinal Column," which was full of interest and provoked considerable discussion, especially on the question of the reduction of spinal curvatures.

The lecture by Dr. J. Ivan Dufur of Philadelphia, entitled "The Nervous Mechanism of Reflex Action," was one of the features of the meeting. Illustrated by stereopticon slides, and giving evidence of much careful preparation, it was received with deep attention and was warmly applauded.

"Stimulation" was the theme of an excellent paper by Dr. E. N. Hansen of Pittsburgh. Doctor Hansen gave ample proof that his cerebral centers have been stimulated by original thought as to the causes of some lesions.

The last formal number on the convention program was a lecture by Dr. Charles J. Muttart of Philadelphia on "Applied Anatomy of the Upper Dorsal Region." Dr. Muttart supplemented his talk with demonstrations on a skeleton and by stereopticon views. Altogether, Doctor Muttart handled his subject in a highly interesting and instructive manner.

Four clinical cases were brought before the meeting, each presenting some unusual and difficult problems. They were examined and treatment of each case outlined and discussed.

In view of impending legislative campaign much consideration was given to matters pertaining thereto. It was announced by the president, Doctor Snyder, that the executive committee proposed to introduce early in the coming session of the legislature, a bill providing for an independent board of osteopathic examiners. The convention, by motion which was carried unanimously, instructed the officers to introduce and support such a measure.

The following officers were elected: President, Dr. O. J. Snyder, Philadelphia; vice president, Dr. F. B. Kann, Harrisburg; secretary, Dr. E. M. Downing, York; treasurer, Dr. William Rohacek, Greensburg; executive committee, the president and secretary ex officio, Dr. H. M. Vastine, Harrisburg, Dr. F. R. Heine and Dr. F. J. Marshall, Pittsburgh.

Doctors Snyder and Rohacek were unanimously re-elected as president and treasurer. Doctor Dufur, who has been secretary of the association ever since its organization, declined to serve longer, owing to increasing duties as Registrar of the Philadelphia College of Osteopathy. His declination called forth from President Snyder a speech full of reminiscences of the earnest and faithful labors of Doctor Dufur during the three hard-fought battles for legal recognition in Pennsylvania, and referring to the ever pleasant and cordial relations existing during the stress of the campaigns.

Immediately after the adjournment of the convention a meeting of the executive committee was held to discuss plans for next winter's campaign.

KANSAS.

Seventh annual meeting of the Kansas Osteopathic Association was held at Topeka, Roof Garden of National Hotel, June 23-24. The attendance was good and interest was marked. "Gastroptosis and Enteroptosis" was the subject of a paper by Dr. J. W. Hofess of Kansas City. "Appendicit's" was discussed by Dr. W. J. Connor of Kansas City. Dr. A. G. Hildreth of St. Louis made an address on Legislation. Officers were elected as follows: President, J. W. Shearer, Abilene; vice president, J. H. Bower, Salina; secretary-treasurer, G. B. Wolf, Ottawa.

G. B. WOLF, D. O., Secretary.

UTAH.

President, J. C. Woodmansee, Salt Lake; vice-president, Harry Phillips; treasurer, G. A. Gamble; secretary, Alice E. Houghton. Board of Trustees: Drs. Grace Stratton, E. E. Keeler, W. N. Minear. The election was held at a postponed session of the regular meeting. ALICE E. HOUGHTON, D. O., Secretary.

DENVER.

At a meeting of the Denver Osteopathic Association held at the Brown Palace Hotel, Saturday evening, June 6th, a paper on Spinal Curvatures was presented by Dr. R. B. Short News Notes

LOYALTY OF P. C. O. ALUMNI.

At the annual banquet of the Alumni of the Pacific College those present raised more than thirteen hundred dollars towards freeing the college from debt. At a similar gathering in 1907 over one thousand dollars. This devotion on the part of the alumni speaks in the highest terms for both college and graduates. It is one of the hopeful signs for the final establishing of osteopathy on a permanent financial basis.

BANQUET TO DR. WILLIAM SMITH.

Saturday evening, June 13th, a banquet was given at the Brown Palace Hotel, in honor of Dr. William Smith of Kirksville, Mo. Thirty-three osteopaths and friends were present and spent a most enjoyable evening. Doctor Smith gave a talk which was much appreciated by all present.

M. D. WANTS FORAKER'S SEAT AND SCALP.

Doctor Reed of Cincinnati, author of a medical text book and a few years ago president of the A. M. A. has announced himself a candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator J. B. Foraker. Senator Foraker does not want to be succeeded—by an M. D.—just at this time. It is supposed that Doctor Reed can have the physician vote in Ohio which is large.

OSTEOPATH ON MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

The Springfield Republican of July 15 states that Dr. M. T. Mayes has been appointed by Governor Guild a member of the Board of Registration in Medicine. He has been assigned the subjects of Pathology and Bacteriology. Concluding the write-up the paper says: "He is one of the pioneer osteopaths, graduating at the American School of Osteopathy in 1897. He thoroughly believes in and practices osteopathy as taught by Dr. A. T. Still, founder, who was one of his teachers and demonstrators during his entire course. He is also a graduate of Dartmouth Medical school and, as well, has given time to hospital work in New York city. Doctor Mayes is vice president of the Massachusetts Osteopathic Society and a charter member of the American Osteopathic Association."

CHANGES ON STATE BOARDS.

North Carolina—Dr. Elizabeth H. Tucker of Durham has been appointed by Governor Glenn to the State Board of Osteopathic Examiners to succeed Dr. H. F. Ray of Charlotte, whose term had expired.

South Dakota—Dr. E. E. Giltner of Redfield is now a member of State Board of Osteopathic Examiners by appointment of the governor in place of Dr. W. V. Goodfellow, resigned.

Idaho—Dr. W. M. Hatfield has been appointed by the governor of the state to membership on the State Board of Osteopathic Examiners.

New York—Doctor Ralph H. Williams of Rochester, N. Y., has been appointed by the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York for a period of three years, to succeed himself as a member of the Board of Medical Examiners. At the organization of the Board one year ago, Doctor Williams, as the osteopathic member, was given a one year term, and as the Board of Regents are entirely free to exercise their appointive power without reference to any school of practice, it is a great satisfaction to the profession that Doctor Williams has been re-appointed.

PRINCIPLES OF OSTEOPATHY

BY G. D. HULLETT, B. S., D. O.

FOURTH EDITION.

This work is a recognized authority on this, the keystone subject of the osteopathic system. It is a logical presentation of the biological, chemical and physical mechanisms of the body, interpreted in the terms of anatomy, physiology and pathology, as applied in osteopathic practice, with a happy discrimination in the exclusion of non-essentials. The style is simple, clear, direct and singularly free from obscurity.

"The one osteopathic work that should be in every osteopathist's office and a real working basis of his professional thinking from day to day."

For sale by all osteopathic book dealers.

My Sunday Sermon.

Well, Bunting,
My old Friend-
Fool or Philosopher?

Allow me to give vent to what I am thinking about and intend to say whether you like it or not.

I have just read your article in March, "Osteopathic Health", and without any flattery, I want to tell you that from start to finish it is the most literary and scientific production that I have ever read from the pen of any writer, on the principle and philosophy of Osteopathy.

I am proud of the production. I am proud of the Man who is not afraid to peruse and acquaint himself with all the branches pertaining to the subject of human life, the form of the body with all its parts and functionings, when in normal or abnormal condition.

Go on with the good work, I am glad to have one man who compromises with nothing, not even Truth itself; a man who is ready to offer and stand to the truth without apology.

Please send me a dozen copies, and bill for same.

With kindest regards to you and Mrs. Bunting.

I am yours truly.

A. T. Stiee

ALL THE YEAR AROUND

This peerless campaigner is now selling at $2.50 per hundred with envelopes, or $20.00 per thousand. There is nothing better to use in your practice every month in the year.

"Osteopathic Health" is a promotion service, a studied and successful campaign of education, the time-honored propaganda of the osteopathic profession. You should use it on annual contract, Doctor.

Cost of service: $3.00 per month for the hundred-a-month service on annual contracts; $20.00 per month for the thousand-a-month service, freight, expressage or postage extra. Will you get in line?
